CALL FOR STUDENT APPLICATIONS

Description

This full-year course provides five (5) students unprecedented engagement with many of the most significant energy lawyers, regulators, producers, stakeholders and academics from around the world. Through this engagement, students are offered an insider’s perspective into the challenges facing policy makers today. Classes are conducted on campus and at other sites (including various locations internationally, such as energy facilities, energy regulators, and offices of Dentons LLP).

Flights, hotels and a meal per diem are provided for all student travel.

In these learning environments, students discuss energy policy challenges with stakeholders and experts in a way that marries academic insight with real-world wisdom. By engaging with the upper echelons of policy communities, students will expand their insight into energy law and policy.

Students are required to use this knowledge to write and present a Policy Whitepaper on a selected energy law and policy issue. Their presentations will be made to a panel of energy experts, who will judge and critique the student’s work. An award will be presented by Dentons Canada LLP for the top policy presentation. In preparation, students will have a half-day workshop session with a seasoned policy advocate, so they can learn how to maximize the impact of their policy message.

By providing students the ability to translate this energy knowledge into policy action, and connecting students with elite policy actors, this course grants students a unique opportunity to become the tomorrow’s energy leaders.

The majority of classes will be held in the first semester. During the second semester classes will be scheduled so that students can participate in other courses.

How to Apply

Interested students are required to submit:

(1) a CV;

(2) an unofficial statement of grades from the Faculty of Law; and

(3) a one-page cover letter outlining their commitment to a career in the energy sector.

Interest in the International Energy Lawyers Program will be considered.

Student applications must be submitted to Angela Gallo-Dewar <agallode@ucalgary.ca>. Deadline of application is Friday, February 28th, 2020. Admission to the course, as well as a waitlist of three (3) will be announced on Friday, March 13th, 2020.
